“Associations are a critical voice in the political process, regardless of the industry or profession they serve. Importantly, APAC serves associations to be viewed as a community with like-minded interests. I am proud to be a supporter of APAC and encourage my association colleagues to do the same. Individually, we may have our own organizational focus. Together, we are a vast and growing sector with the expertise and resources to address many of the important issues facing our nation, and the world, today.”

— Susan K. Reiss, CAE, APAC Contributor
Associations are a critical voice in the political process, regardless of the industry or profession they serve. Importantly, APAC serves associations to be viewed as a community with like-minded interests. I am proud to be a supporter of APAC and encourage my association colleagues to do the same. Individually, we may have our own organizational focus. Together, we are a vast and growing sector with the expertise and resources to address many of the important issues facing our nation, and the world, today.

— Susan K. Reavis, CFE, APAC Contributor
Associations are a critical voice in the political process, regardless of the industry or profession they serve. Importantly, APAC views associations to be viewed as a community with like-minded interests. I am proud to be a supporter of APAC and encourage my association colleagues to do the same. Individually, we may have our own organizational focus. Together, we are a vast and growing sector with the expertise and resources to address many of the important issues facing our nation, and the world, today.

— Susan K. Rivers, CFE, APAC Contributor
"Associations are a critical voice in the political process, regardless of the industry or profession they serve. Importantly, APAC stove associations to be viewed as a community with like-minded interests. I am proud to be a supporter of APAC and encourage my association colleagues to do the same. Individually, we may have our own organizational focus. Together, we are a vast and growing sector with the expertise and resources to address many of the important issues facing our nation, and the world today."

-- Susan K. Hewitt, CFE, APAC Contributor